INTERESTING LECTURE.

The Lectures Given Yesterday by Mrs. Mabel L. Conklin Were Largely Attended.

The lectures given yesterday in the Methodist church by Mrs. Mabel L Conklin, under the auspices of the Ministerial association, were largely attended and quite an interest is being manifested by our townspeople. The services were opened yesterday afternoon by Rev. S. A. Lewis, pastor of the A. M. E. church. Mrs. Mouer sang a solo, after which Mrs. Conklin delivered her lecture on "What to Tell Our Children."

The services last night were opened by Rev. J. M. Jamison. Miss Nellie Boore rendered a very beautiful solo with guitar accompaniment. Mrs. Conklin then lectured on "That Boy of Yours," the talk being very interesting, instructive and pleasing. Mrs Conklin lectured this afternoon on "How to be Beautiful." The subject tonight is "Power and Responsibility of the Individual." The general public is invited.

Lawrence McCune of Cadiz, O., has accepted a position at R. L. McMahon's store.

A dime social will be held this week at the home of Miss Mae Irwin of Donora for the benefit of the Sons of Temperance. All members from Webster are invited.

A great deal of trouble and excitement was created Monday morning at the Budd mine by a loaded coal car jumping the track. Operations were suspended for a short time, while the car was being righted, in which quite a lot of difficulty was experienced.

It is a very gratifying fact to realize that Webster, our home town, has one of the soundest banking institutions in this vicinity. It is also pleasing to learn that through the enterprise and ability of its efficient officers, an increase of $10,000 is recorded since last report, as will be shown by the report contained in this issue. Webster has just cause to be proud of this institution.

Child Killed by Gypsies.

Four-year-old Aspie Kobster is dead at the home of his parents in Braddock, the result of a fiendish prank played by three young Gypsies belonging to a colony wintering near there. The child was playing on the pavement when the gypsie boys, the oldest of whom is 11 years climbed to the fire escape of the Franz Hotel and securing a heavy iron weight deliberately dropped it on the head of the child, splitting his skull; he died instantly. The Gypsies have been placed under arrest and will be given a hearing this evening.

Food of the Oyster.

"Many gallons, probably many barrels, of water are drawn through the gills of each oyster each day," writes a university professor, "and the microscopic beings that it may hold are strained out and pushed along into the oyster's mouth. Each microscopic organism is a long time in traveling from the point where it first touches the gill to the oyster's stomach; all this while it is alive and capable of becoming the parent of new generations when removed from the gill and placed under suitable conditions. Most of these organisms are wholesome to man, and all that enter the oyster's stomach are quickly killed and converted into its palatable and nutritious substance, but so long as they are traveling along the gills all are alive and, some are extremely dangerous to man. The oyster exercises choice in the selection of its food, rejecting some of the microscopic organisms and swallowing others, but those that are discharged into the water with the sewage of cities are not unfortunately among the ones that are rejected, and before these have entered the oyster's stomach they are most favorably placed for gaining entrance into human stomachs and multiplying there."

Queer Beliefs About the Fern.

The fern was supposed to seed only on St. John's night and thus to possess those singular properties for which it had become almost sacred. The gathering of the seed was believed to be attended with considerable danger. Povet in his "Pandemonium," published in 1684, says: "Much discourse hath been about gathering of fern seed (which is looked upon as a magical herb) on the night of midsummer's eve, and I remember I was told of one who went to gather it, and the spirits whisked by his ears like bullets and sometimes struck his hat and other parts of his body. In fine, though he apprehended he had got a quantity of it side, when at last home he found all empty. But probable this appointing of time hours is of the devil's own institution, as well as the fact that, having once ensnared people to an obedience to his rules, he may with more facility oblige them to stricter vassalage."

Capacity of Great Churches.

The Roman Advertiser gives the following statistics of the capacity of the great churches of the world, allowing four persons to every square yard:

	Persons.	Sq. yds.
Milan cathedral	37,000	9,250
St. Paul's, Rome	32,000	8,000
St. Paul's, London	25,600	6,400
St. Petronio's, Bologna	24,400	6,100
Florence cathedral	24,300	6,075
Antwerp cathedral	24,000	6,000
St. Sophia's, Constantinople	23,000	5,750
St. John's Lateran	22,900	5,725
Notre Dame, Paris	21,000	5,250
Pisa cathedral	13,000	3,250
St. Stephen's, Vienna	12,400	3,100
St. Dominic's, Bologna	12,000	3,000
St. Peter's, Bologna	11,400	2,850
Cathedral of Siena	11,000	2,750
St. Mark's, Venice	7,000	1,750

The piazza of St. Peter's in its widest limits, allowing twelve persons to the square mile, holds 624,000; allowing four to the same, drawn up in military array, 208,000. In its narrowest limits, not comprising the porticos of the Piazzi Rusticucci, 474,000 crowded and 158,000 in military array.

Dickens' Gay Clothes.

We were walking down Wellington street, Strand, and just passing the office of Household Words, when a handsom cab stopped, and out stepped a gayly dressed gentleman. His bright green waistcoat, vivid scarlet tie and pale lavender trousers would have been noticed by any one, but the size of the nosegay in his buttonhole riveted my attention, for it was a regular flower garden. My father stopped and introduced me, and I, who had only seen engravings of the Maclise portrait and a very handsome head in my mother's photograph album, was astonished to find myself shaking hands with the great novelist Charles Dickens.—From Miss Friswell's "Recollections."

The Gilded Man.

At the headwaters of the Orinoco the Spanish traditions located the land of El Dorado, "The Gilded Man," a potentate whose country was so rich in gold dust that he had his body anointed with oil and sprinkled with gold every morning, so that he shone in the sun as though gilded. It is a curious fact that the country in which tradition located this marvelous being has never been explored by a white man.

Monkeys' Rouge.

"Kamala" is the vernacular name of the red dye produced from the glands of the mature fruit of a tree named "Mallotus philippensis," which is also called the "monkey face tree" because monkeys paint their faces red by rubbing them on the fruit. Here is a striking instance of the influence of heredity.—Madras Mail.

The Bisque Token

By JOHN ERIC VIRGINI

Copyright, 1906, by McClure, Phillips & Co.

The long sand beach seemed to be deserted—not a single soul in view. Suddenly from the gray timbers of a wrecked vessel's stern rose Dickie Boy's head. Half kneeling in his worn and scanty garments, he rested a hand on the jagged edge of a beam and, craning his neck, looked up and down the beach.

For a second he knelt there, facing the gleaming sea. The sun was in the west, but it was still bright. Well, it was early yet. She usually came a bit nearer sunset time. He hastily dived into one of his pockets and from the tangle that crammed it extracted three marbles, a fishhook and—his dearly bought treasure. The salesgirl had wrapped it daintily for him with narrow white ribbon, and he held it carefully, almost reverently, in both brown little hands.

"Jiminee, I'm glad I've got somethin' to give her before she goes away—somethin' to remember me by."

For a quarter hour more the sun marched toward the western horizon, and then she came. But, alas, she was not alone! A man was with her—not one of her numerous summer admirers, but a man whom Dickie never had seen. He was young and vigorous, but there was something about him that bespoke age—a sternness, even a hardness, as of one who had fought battles.

They passed the corner of the wreck whence Dickie Boy's head had risen just before and went down to the other end of the vessel, where some fallen timbers made a sheltered seat. They were both looking away from the dismantled stern, and through a convenient opening in its joints a pair of blue eyes watched them eagerly. It was not in Dickie's character of youthful traditions to sneak or hide, even less to be an eavesdropper, but somehow a curious shyness had invaded him at sight of the stranger, and he found himself unable to go forward or speak, but of the conversation which reached his ears he understood little or nothing—he was still such a child.

"How plainly we hear the buoy!" said the girl, arranging the border of her blue serge skirt close to her russet shoes. She was intent upon speaking of impersonalities. The man looked out to sea, whence came the fitful tone at disconcerting intervals.

"Wind's in our direction," he remarked briefly.

"What makes it so sad?" she speculated idly, picking up a pebble and throwing it into the surf. "The irregularity of the sound, do you think?"

"Irregularity is not necessarily sad," the man objected. I think perhaps it's the aimlessness, the futility of it, dear. A bell ought to call people together, and this one warns them off. Therefore it's lonely. It must ever be lonely. That's why it's sad, little girl."

The bell swung at the mercy of the wind and water. Its sound came to them in the pauses of the surf.

"Keep away, keep away!" chanted the girl, with the same measured intervals. "Yes, I don't know but you're right. It's a rather doleful burden."

While the girl looked silently out to sea he reverently studied her face, with its somewhat pale beauty—the effects of the gold hair under the yachting cap and that of the chastening indifference of her eyes.

Suddenly he rose and stood before her, his broad shoulders silhouetted against the growing pink of the western sky.

"I'm going away again, Eleanor," he said. "I'm going tonight. I thought when I came back that you might love me. Perhaps you do. I don't know. You don't know yourself. But I've lost my old boyish faith, you see. I distrust you, and you distrust yourself—and—so—it is hopeless."

He spoke with a bitterness that seemed involuntary. Then for one brief second he stooped and laid his face against the soft hair on her forehead. She could not see the yearning tenderness of his expression, but there was a flush on her cheeks and a light in her eyes.

"You see, Blair," she said slowly, "it's so hard for me to know my own mind, I"—

"Yes," he threw in, a little frown on his forehead, "and it wasn't so very different five years ago."

"You mean to reproach me, Blair?" The flush on the girl's face was deeper now, but the light had died out. The note of trouble in her voice melted him. Unconsciously he sat down again on the timbers.

"I mean that I have lost five good years out of my life because you didn't know your own mind, little girl. If you had known"—

She held out her slim hand to stop him. Then his eye fell on a tiny ring on the third finger—a ring with a bit of red stone like a drop of blood. He reached over and took the outstretched hand.

"Poor little ring," he said musingly. "You would not take it, you remember, Eleanor, till I promised that it should bind you to nothing. It was to be a reminder merely of our friendship. But in these five years all my thought, all my labor, has been for you. I've never been wholly hopeful, but now the last shred of hope is gone." He relinquished her hand gently. "And tomorrow—well, the years that stretch before me seem a bit black and long."

"Blair, I don't think it's kind of you to talk like that," the girl broke in, with a nervous little laugh that was half a sob. "It makes me feel—it makes me feel positively guilty, as if I had purposely broken your heart. You wouldn't want me to marry you if I hadn't surely made up my mind, would you? And I can't help it if nature deliberately made me a coquette—so there!" She tossed a handful of sand into space. She was angry with herself for the foolish tears that had started.

Then there came a startled little cry of pain. Some of the sand had blown directly into Dickie Boy's blue eyes.

A few moments later, when he had been drawn out into the light and had stammered his honest excuses, he laid the ribbon wrapped packet in his lady's lap and would have turned and fled, but his limbs seemed to have lost the power of locomotion.

Eleanor swiftly untied the ribbon while Dickie watched her adoringly. He was not afraid of her, ever, but of the big strange gentleman with the serious eyes.

"Oh, oh, oh!" cried Eleanor. "What a dear, cunning little heart!" She held up a heart shaped pin tray between her eyes and the light. "And it's bisque, real bisque. But who sent it, Dickie Boy?"

"I bought it; I did," assured Dickie, swelling with dignity.

"Why, Dickie, Dickie Boy! Wherever in the world did you get so much money?" she said tenderly, drawing him down to her side and pushing back his locks of hair while she looked into his eyes.

"Worked," answered Dickie laconically, displaying his hard, brown little hands, which showed unmistakable signs of wrestle with a stubborn soil.

"Oh, Dickie, Dickie Boy! And you did all this for me?"

"Do more'n that for you, I would. I'd do anything for you," said he stoutly. "An' I wanted you to have somethin' to remember me by when you was gone."

Involuntarily Eleanor turned to the grave face behind her. Blair had not spoken. He was looking at the cliffs which frowned darkly against the glow of the sunset sky, and it suddenly struck her how deep were the lines that loneliness and pain had carved. Quickly she glanced down again at the adoring small countenance on her arm. Years before Blair's face had worn that same look of boyish idolatry. The remembrance of it touched her now as his manly devotion had failed to do.

"I'll keep the little heart always, Dickie," she said, rising from the sand and stooping to kiss the boy's forehead as she did so.

"An' you won't break it?" inquired Dickie anxiously. Eleanor smiled strangely. The bit of bisque had come to her as a token.

"No, Dickie Boy, I shall never break any more hearts, I think—never any more." Turning to the man, she said gently: "Blair, dear, I'd like to walk up the hill and see the last of the sunset. Will you come?"

The man stopped at sight of the girl's face. There was about it a strange radiance that touched while it uplifted him.

And as the two went up the hill together Dickie followed at a respectful distance, turning handsprings.

It Came Hard.

In France, as in most other countries, it is necessary to give one's age when making a statement in a court of justice as well as in many other official proceedings. But Frenchwomen of mature years are noted above all other women for their unwillingness to state their age.

On one occasion a lady who had to testify was accompanied to the court by a numerous company of her friends, and when the magistrate asked, "How old are you?" there was such a coughing and clearing of throats as of people suffering from severe colds that all that could be heard in the courtroom was "—ty years!"

Through the amiability of the magistrate this more than half suppressed response was allowed to stand, but the tribunals are not always so lenient. On another occasion a magistrate asked a woman:

"What is your age, madam?"

"Whatever you choose, sir," answered the lady. She was under oath.

"You may put down forty five years, then," said the magistrate to the clerk. "What is your occupation, madam?"

"Sir," said the witness, "you have made a mistake of ten years in my age."

"Put down fifty-five years, then," said the magistrate. "Your residence"

"Sir," exclaimed the lady, "my age is thirty-five years, not fifty five"

"At last we have your statement," said the magistrate, and he proceeded with the examination.

Lafayette and America.

Marie Jean Paul Roch Yves Gilbert Motier, Marquis de Lafayette, was a young French nobleman who, on hearing that America had declared independence of Great Britain, resolved to come over and assist us in the struggle. He was already an officer in the French army, but obtained leave of absence. On his arrival in Philadelphia, then the seat of government, in the summer of 1777, congress voted him a commission as major general, though he was not yet twenty-one years of age. He rendered distinguished service to the American cause, especially at the battle of Yorktown, for which Washington publicly thanked him the day after Cornwallis' surrender. After his return to his native land he took an important part in the French revolution and the events which followed. He returned to America in 1824 and was most enthusiastically received in each of the twenty-four states and all the principal cities. Congress voted him $200,000 and a township of land in consideration of his former services, his own fortune having been confiscated during the reign of terror.—St. Louis Republic

Couldn't Lift Ten Pounds.

Doan's Kidney Pills Brought Strength and Health to the Sufferer, Making Him Feel Twenty-Five Years Younger.

Sick kidneys cause a weak, lame or aching back, and a weak back makes a weak man. Can't be well and strong until the kidneys are cured. Treat them with Doan's Kidney Pills. Here's the testimony of one man cured.

J. B. CORTON.

J. B. Corton, farmer and lumberman, of Deppe, N. C., says "I suffered for years with my back. It was so bad that I could not walk any distance nor even ride in easy buggy. I do not believe I could have raised ten pounds of weight from the ground, the pain was so severe. This was my condition when I began using Doan's Kidney Pills. They quickly relieved me and now I am never troubled as I was. My back is strong and I can walk or ride a long distance and feel just as strong as I did twenty-five years ago. I think so much of Doan's Kidney Pills that I have given a supply of the remedy to some of my neighbors and they have also found good results. If you can sift anything from this rambling note that will be of any service to you, or to any one suffering from kidney trouble, you are at liberty to do so."

A FREE TRIAL of this great kidney medicine which cured Mr. Corton will be mailed on application to any part of the United States. Address Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y. Sold by all dealers; price, fifty cents per box.

In the Blizzard's Grip

[Copyright, 1[illegible] by McClure, Phillips & Co.]

Joe Peters was a bad one, but a thoroughbred. He had seen better days.

Colville was five miles from Fort Yuma. Colonel McClintock used to ignore the town's laws and go for trespassers against his command himself. He had had tilts with Joe Peters and had declared that he would some day get him dead to rights. He thought the day had come when a paymaster was robbed, and the finger of suspicion pointed strongly to the gambler. Over to Colville he went, with half a company at his back, and Peters had just five minutes to prepare himself. He "made good" by walking out to meet the colonel and holding a revolver to his head until he gave the order for the soldiers to turn back. When the colonel had got back to his parade ground he took the biggest kind of an oath that he wouldn't die until he had got even for the humiliation.

When fall came it was known that Joe Peters was out of health. Dissipation and a strenuous life were beginning to tell. He was so financially well fixed that he could have gone in any direction, but he remained right there. He had the cough of a consumptive on him and men had begun to notice that his grip was growing weaker when winter, which had been holding off in a wonderful way, set in with a blizzard. It began blowing and snowing soon after noon one day, and an hour after dark the driver of the up coach rolled off his horse at the Black Bear hotel and was carried into the barroom more dead than alive. He reported that he had been compelled to abandon his coach in Panther pass, five miles below. He had cut loose one of the leaders and had been three hours making his way into Colville against the gale and the drifts.

"And the passengers?" some one asked.

"There wasn't but one, and, God help me, I had to leave her in the coach!"

"A woman, and you left her behind!" exclaimed Joe Peters as he came forward.

"But what could I do?" whimpered the man.

His ears and nose and fingers and toes had been frostbitten, and had he had half a mile farther to go the cutting winds would have had his life. If he had abandoned the woman he had at least reached some spot from which help could be sent.

"Who is the woman?" asked Peters of the driver.

"She's the colonel's wife. That's what makes it so bad. Nobody can get through to the fort in this storm. Every cut will be blocked five feet deep."

Peters rose up and walked about for a moment and then said to the landlord:

"Have the boy saddle my horse. I also want a couple of blankets and a bottle of brandy."

"What the devil's afoot, Joe?"

"I'm going after the woman."

There were vigorous protests from the score of men in the barroom. They were not a [illegible]sh lot, and chivalry was not dead [illegible] their breast, but it was one chance [illegible] hundred, and they did not feel li[illegible] taking it. If a rescuer succeeded [illegible] forcing his way through the drifts [illegible] would be to find the woman froze [illegible] to death. They argued and protested, but Peters quietly went on with hi[illegible] preparations. When they saw that h[illegible] was determined to go man after man o[illegible]ered his company.

"I'm going to try it alone," replied Peters. "You know I've got a little account to settle with the colonel. Have things ready to thaw us out when we turn up."

"There's a man for you, and we are a lot of curs!" announced on individual as Peters [illegible] away in the storm and darkness, [illegible] no man turned to resent his words.

No one [illegible] ever told how the gambler's hors[illegible] ifted his way through the drifts [illegible] the stage was finally reached. [illegible] seemed impossible was at last acc[illegible]ished. The three stage horses left [illegible]and had fallen stiff in their tracks [illegible]d were hidden under the snow, and [illegible] vehicle was simply one of the man[illegible]ow mounds.

"Is anyb[illegible]n there?" was shouted by the ma[illegible] horseback

"Yes, but I am perishing with the cold."

"Drink half this bottle of brandy and then wrap these blankets around you. Now give me your hand, and get you on the saddle in front of me. No more talk now."

Two hours down to the stalled coach, two hours back to Colville, and the thermometer had gone down twelve degrees in that time. There were men who swore in admiration, and there were others who turned away with tears in their eyes at the sight.

"The woman is all right and will be shipper in a day or two," said the doctor, "but Joe Peters has played his last hand. It's the most cruel thing I ever saw. He can't be disturbed for a day or two, but after that you want to form in line and go softly in and bid him goodby."

Three days later the colonel came down from the fort to find his wife up and about and playing nurse to the man waiting in the shadow. He heard the tale and took one of the limp hands in both of his, and with tears streaming down his cheeks he said:

"I can't begin to tell you how I feel about this."

"Cut it out, colonel," answered Peters, with a weary smile. "Perhaps it's a bit of offset for some of my shady things. Yes; cut it out and send the boys in to shake hands. I'm not much on sentiment, but I'm going a long journey, and I want a good sendoff."

AT THE THEATRE.

In "Deserted at the Altar" which comes to the Monessen opera house tonight we are shown in four acts and nine scenes the many charming aspects of the Adirondack Mountains, 'mid wild flowers pine trees, birds and sunlight of summer, and in their midwinter dress on Christmas Day. A play so far above the ordinary run as to be in a class by itself, clean, wholesome, bright with comedy, and startling in mechanical effects. A capable company and all special scenery is carried to produce a play true to nature beside which many new specialties are introduced by various members of the company, tending to give the audience an evening of rare enjoyment.

When J. C. Stewart's merry musical farce "The Two Johns" makes its appearance here at the Monessen opera house next Thursday Feb. 8 it will undoubtedly be greeted by one of the largest audiences of the season. This comedy seems to improve with age, and in addition to this the management claim it has been hypodermically treated with new jokes and songs. The comedy requires twenty three different characters and the costumes are said to be creations of art.

Horses Invade Restaurant.

During a fire which did $1,200 damage to the Home Brewery at Braddock yesterday, a team of horses became frightened and dashed into a restaurant on Eighth street. The place was full of diners at the time and a great panic ensued. One of the waiters who possessed a cool head, finally succeeded in getting the horses outside and restoring peace after the animals (horses) had smashed things to the tune of $200.

The term "Prime Minister."

"Prime minister" is one of the many terms in English which seem to have been slang at one time. It was first applied to Sir Robert Walpole, but in a reproachful sense. Feb. 11, 1742, after twenty years' tenure of office, Sir Robert resigned all his employments. "Having invested me," he remarked, "with a kind of mock dignity and styled me prime minister, they impute to me an unpardonable abuse of that chimerical authority which they created and conferred." Such a personage as the prime minister or the premier is not even mentioned in the official table of precedence and is unknown to the written constitution of Great Britain.

The Live Sponge.

When the sponge is in the sea alive the inside of the pores is covered with a soft substance like the white of an egg. This appears to be the flesh of the animal, and currents of water may be seen running into the sponge through the small pores and out of it through the large ones, and it is supposed that while the water is passing through the sponge the nourishment for the support of the animal is extracted from it.
